

This is an interesting topic and one that requires a more sophisticated understanding of the subject. There is a clear conflict; the student identifies the contradiction and the positions and interests of the parties in conflict. There is analysis of the ensuing violence but this is limited. Violence must be identified in its many forms beyond direct, physical and observable violence and as it affects those beyond the immediate conflict. There is a sophisticated analysis of the positions and interests of the parties and exploration of third party intervention and possible solutions.